Canada's Fresh Water Summit set to make a splash

The Coboconk community will once again come together for Canada's Fresh Water Summit Festival taking place on June 15 to 17.

Located on the northern point of Balsam Lake, the Summit Festival is more than just a fun gathering - it is a celebration of history, and recognition of the value and importance of fresh water.

Balsam Lake is recognized as the highest fresh water elevation in Canada where one is able to reach all four oceans. This means you are able to travel anywhere in the world by starting in the community of Coboconk without ever touching land! This makes the wharf in Coboconk a historical site worth celebrating.

The festival begins at the Coboconk wharf on Friday night from 7 to 11 p.m. with great food from favourite local restaurants. This year we are excited to kick off the summit weekend with music from Live on the Line! The festival continues into Saturday with free activities for all - including a professional water ski and flyboard show and Kids Zone activities including a bouncy castle, face painting, Zoo to You, and more! Be sure to check out community displays and booths, and enjoy a delicious pancake breakfast. Enjoy the end of your weekend with an outdoor worship service on Sunday celebrating the role of water in our lives in the Lions Park amphitheatre followed by a picnic lunch.

Visit Coboconk and all it has to offer at the 10th annual Fresh Water Summit Festival.

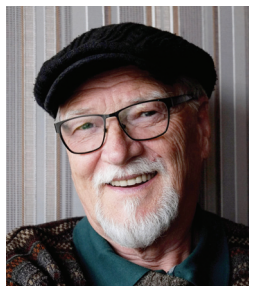
Revs Your Heart

Dynamic Duo at the 'D'



GEORGE FARRELL
On Arts

IT'S NOT EVERY day that you get a chance to see two of Canada's rising young musical stars at the same time, but on the evening of June 16, guitar whiz Chris Caddell will be joining keyboard ace Jesse O'Brien for two sets of blues, R&B, rock, and originals at the Dominion Hotel in Minden.

As a teenager, and already a prodigy on piano, Jesse O'Brien was introduced to the legendary Ronnie Hawkins, which was the start to a much-lauded career as a sought-after keyboardist. O'Brien was inspired by the late, great keyboardist Stan Szelest (one-time member of The Band), whose ability to play any style of music was something O'Brien took to be a prerequisite for a music career. "You have to play everything to get by," he says. "Half the time when you show up at a studio, you don't even know if you're walking into a country, jazz, or pop session."

O'Brien has indeed played everything; with the likes of Cowboy Junkies, King Biscuit Boy, Fathead, Matthew Barber and the Johnny Max band. He has toured with Colin James, and, at the London Blues Festival he was invited on stage to play a set with Levon Helm, legendary drummer for The Band.

O'Brien has previously played the 'D' on two occasions; with Harrison Kennedy and with keyboardist/producer Lance Anderson. This is what Anderson says of O'Brien: "I've known Jesse O'Brien since he was 18. He has a gift, and whatever he has you cannot teach. Not even sure if you can learn it. It's not even the notes he plays, it's the feel and the notes he doesn't play. Every time he plays it's fresh and new. The best blues pianist I have heard in 40 years."

Jesse O'Brien "has a gift, and whatever he has you cannot teach. Not even sure if you can learn it," keyboardist/producer Lance Anderson says. /Photo submitted

Toronto-based singer/guitarist Chris Caddell has played with bluesman and long-time pal Colin James, MonkeyJunk's Steve Marriner, and, as part of an all star-blues bill, with blues greats Buddy Guy and Charlie Musselwhite.

Caddell still remembers his first introduction to music. His dad was in a college band. "They never really did gigs, but the band's families would play music the whole time, and the music was always there. Then I got into my own thing," He started playing guitar at 14 and wanted to learn solos. He began with Green Day and punk, evolving to Jimi Hendrix, Eric Clapton, Stevie Ray Vaughan and the three Kings; B.B. Freddy and Albert.

Caddell began going to all of the weekly blues jams in Toronto; places like Healey's and Grossman's Tavern, where he quickly got a regular Tuesday night gig. One of his first major gigs was playing bass for rocker Fefe Dobson. Caddell has also been in the studio or on stage with the likes of Hawksley Workman, Grady, The Trews, Amanda Marshall, Jeff Healey, Kid Rock and Bon Jovi. Caddell is still playing with Sass Jordan, and with Colin James's band. He also plays with James as an acoustic duo on the theatre circuit.

Caddell has cut two albums: Chris Caddell & The Wreckage in 2008, and Tough Lung 2014, both of which feature Caddell's masterful guitar personality and powerful vocals. His up-front guitar style, whether playing blues, rock, or occasionally funk, evokes the quality of Eric Clapton, and the mellowness of Mark Knopfler.

Caddell, as well as being the music director for Sass Jordan, has also co-written a few songs with her. Recently he's been working as a duo with Jesse O'Brien, another member of the Colin James band. "Chris is one of the most exceptional talents in Canada on electric and acoustic guitar, in addition to being a fantastic singer," says O'Brien. "Everyone at the Dominion will love his voice."

For their Dominion gig expect to hear songs from the likes of Helm and Colin James. There will also be original songs from the album Caddell and O'Brien are working on together. The two sets will feature electric and acoustic guitar and great vocals from Caddell and top-notch keyboards and the occasional vocal from O'Brien.

Chris Caddell and Jesse O'Brien are at the Dominion Hotel in Minden on the evening of June 16. It will be Father's Day weekend, so bring the old man out to see two exceptional rising stars. First set starts at 8 p.m. Tickets are $20 and are available at DominionHotelPub.ca or by pickup at the hotel.

Keeping design in mind at home and beyond

JENN WATT
County Life Editor

YOU COULD SEE Katie Golec's posture shift as cuffs were placed around her knees, tightened with Velcro straps. The 25-year-old ACM Designs staff member used her back, not her knees, to lift her legs into the bright orange jumpsuit, which was then loaded with 12 weights equalling 13 extra pounds.

Golec had volunteered to try out the Age Explorer suit provided by Blum, which makes hinges, drawers and lift systems.

The suit was designed to introduce the user to some of the challenges people can face as they age. Special gloves simulated arthritis. Glasses made reading more difficult. A visor reduced peripheral vision and changed the colours seen.

As Golec moved around the kitchen space at ACM, it became evident just how important good design features can be – not just for us as we age, but to make spaces more welcoming to everyone.

Baby boomers make up about 29 per cent of the Canadian population. As this group ages, better designed more accessible spaces will be necessary, Lucy Traetto, dynamic space specialist, told the group.

StatsCan reported in 2012 that nearly 14 per cent of the country's population over 15 years old had a disability that limited daily activity.

"When we put things into perspective we really need to think of this segment of the marketplace and start … thinking differently or outside the box," she said.

Those at the Lunch and Learn discussed universal design, which means design that can be accessed and used by the broadest group of people possible. And it doesn't need to be expensive.

Making spaces better can be as simple as choosing wider doorways, so that someone using a wheelchair – or a caregiver with a couple of tots in tow – can navigate through with ease. It means using drawers in the kitchen rather than cabinets with shelves, so that the cook doesn't have to keep kneeling to find pots and pans while making dinner.

You didn't need to put on the Age Explorer suit to see the benefits of broadening our perspective of the world. And the concepts discussed weren't just about changing your kitchen around.

Changing our mentality about how to include everyone can be applied through our decision making when building new facilities, selecting meeting spaces for our clubs and committees and in making purchases for our homes.

Is the space we're selecting for our committee meetings equipped with large washrooms that accommodate parents with change tables? Are they spacious enough to allow for a wheelchair or walker? Are there grab bars to help with navigation?

When we buy chairs for the boardroom, are we selecting ones with arms on them, which can help people get onto their feet more easily?

This thought process can be taken further, to the wider spaces we all navigate.

When we improve our roads, are we paving the shoulders so that people travelling on bicycles can safely navigate the space alongside cars and trucks? Are we creating our park spaces with smooth pathways that allow for the most people to travel on them no matter their mobility level?

All of these choices come with costs – from replacing cabinets in your kitchen to widening sidewalks in town – but they come with vast benefits. Making spaces welcoming for all people attracts more people to a community and encourages others to stay as they age. A home that has taken accessibility into account is more desirable to buyers and will fetch a higher resale price.

It's not always possible to revamp spaces as quickly as we want to, but if we keep accessibility in mind as we make decisions, we can steadily transform our world into one that is more welcoming to everyone.

Trilliums cover the forest floor in Carnarvon. /JENN WATT Staff

Getting ready for the skateboard park

STEVE GALEA
Humour Columnist

NOW THAT THE grand opening of the skateboard park is almost upon us, I've decided to finally try to be one of the cool kids. One of the best ways, I figure, is to become a skateboarder.

So, like cool kids everywhere, I consulted Wikipedia and learned a few things that will help me make the transition. Here are the top 10 things I learned.

1. No one says "totally tubular" anymore.
2. Sometimes going viral isn't always a good thing.
3. Ball cap on backwards, not pants.
4. If you're trying to convince people that what you did was a "cool new trick," it helps if you don't cry.
5. A ripper is what boarders call a really good skater. So, in that sense, it's not at all like hunt camp.
6. Remember, a backside is a trick, not something you land on.
7. Training wheels on your board? Not cool.
8. Getting air is acceptable. Giving some back is not.
9. The trick is called a Full Cab not a "Crowded Uber."
10. I don't care what anyone says, you can never wear too many helmets.

Bowie ready to rock Haliboo MusicFest

ANGELICA INGRAM
County Life Staff

There isn't a genre of music that Michael Bell isn't willing to tackle.

A singer since the age of 12, Bell has been listening to David Bowie's music since he was a teenage boy, and performing it for the past few decades.

A native of Peterborough, Bell has done many things in his life, including running for federal government as a Green Party candidate. But he always comes back to the music.

He is currently the front man of Bowie Lives, a tribute show that has been around for about a year.

"Back in the 1980s I had a Bowie show," he said. "My entire life, as a teenager I was a huge fan. I probably bought my first Bowie record when I was 13 and followed his career for the most part."

Bell, who is in his 50s, was a professional musician in his younger days and put all of that on hold when he met his wife and decided to start a family. He owns and operates a number of magazines and

SHARE THE ROAD

The Haliburton Highlands is a great place to explore and discover by walking, cycling or driving! But most of our roads don't have separate space for people to walk or bike. Whether on the road for transportation or recreation, we want everyone to have a comfortable and enjoyable experience. On two wheels, four wheels or two feet, it's important to be courteous and watchful for each other. We all play a role in making sure our roads are safe places for all users.

MOTORISTS

- You are in a heavy, protected vehicle. Remember that cyclists and walkers are more vulnerable road users
- Give at least one metre of space when passing a cyclist or walker
- To pass a walker or cyclist, slow down and wait until the road ahead is clear of oncoming traffic
- Watch for cyclists and walkers when making turns
- Be patient, especially with seniors or people with disabilities who need more time to cross the road. You must remain stopped at a crosswalk until a walker is completely out of the roadway

CYCLISTS

- Obey all traffic laws, signs and signals
- Ride on the right, with traffic
- Be visible! In dark and low light cyclists are required to use reflectors and lights – white in front, red in back
- Be predictable – use hand signals, ride in a straight line
- Be courteous – single up when it's safe to allow vehicles to pass

WALKERS

- Where there is no sidewalk, walk facing traffic and single file
- Be visible! Wear bright clothing with reflective strips and carry a light when it is dark
- Be sure you can see and hear traffic around you
- When using a crosswalk, make sure drivers see you before you cross. If the driver is stopped, make eye contact before stepping into the road

Internet websites, including an entertainment publication.

"I was doing business all over the place," he says. "I was working a lot in festival management, as well as publishing the magazine, and helping bands and producing homegrown albums. Doing everything I could to stay in the business without having to perform or go out, other then the odd gig."

Apart from the Bowie tribute band, Bell also performs swing music, jazz and other genres, as well as his own original music.

However it is his resemblance and similarity to the iconic rock pop star that had managers lining him up to fill the shoes of the Ziggy Stardust singer.

"What's the expression, a brother from another mother," jokes Bell. "And I sound a lot like him because I really cut my teeth on his music."

Bell says he took the news of the singer's death hard.

"In retrospect I was like a teenage girl," he says. "It was the oddest thing, I woke up to the news and it didn't hit me right away and in an hour I was just distraught."

For Bell, Bowie wasn't just a singer but a personality. Growing up in Peterborough, a more conservative town, Bell wasn't afraid to be a little out there with his fashion choices, similar to Bowie. "As a kid I embraced all the crazy fashions of his … I was sent home more than once by the principal to change my clothes," he says.

Later in his life Bell began to respect Bowie for his keen business sense and influence in the music world.

Playing a Bowie tribute show is both fun and challenging, as there are many styles of music to emulate and some challenging instrumentation to learn.

Backing Bell in Bowie Lives are some of the area's most sought after musicians, including Chuck Daily on bass, Jason White on guitar, Michael Beauclerc on drums and vocals, Matt Lagan on sax and percussion and Sandor Schwisburg on keyboards.

"Another thing I always thought was amazing about him [Bowie] was he understood to let everybody in the band shine and to let them come to the table with ideas," says Bell.

Bowie Lives covers the entire career of David Bowie, however don't expect costume changes or crazy hairstyles. In his '80s tribute show Bell did eight costume changes, but the current show is more like a Bowie concert.

"We do all the hits and we do it as a discography, so we open with Space Oddity and we end with Lazarus," says Bell.

The show is not just about performing great music but also about having fun. It is high energy and very entertaining.

"That's the thing about the Bowie fan, they're a hardcore fan for the most part. We promote the idea that you show up in Bowie regalia … there's so many looks to choose from."

Bowie Lives will be on stage at Head Lake Park on July 6 as part of the Haliburton Soap Hockey Championships and MusicFest.

For more information on how to get tickets to Bowie Lives and other performances happening at the Haliboo MusicFest, visit www. soaphockey.ca/haliboo-musicfest.html.

Designing for human aging

JENN WATT
County Life Editor

Homes aren't always designed with the whole life cycle in mind. Plates, cups and heavy dishes are stored in shoulder-level cupboards or above, cleaning supplies at the back of a cabinet under the sink.

While not comfortable to reach for young adults, over time these decisions end up making our living spaces tricky, frustrating and, sometimes dangerous.

On Friday, May 18, ACM Designs in Haliburton held a Lunch and Learn featuring Lucy Traetto, a dynamic space specialist with Blum, which makes hinges, drawers and lift systems.

Her talk focused on her company's products, but also on the effects of aging and what it means to "age in place" – to design one's living spaces to accommodate a range of abilities.

Drawers at waist level rather than cupboards that require the user to bend down or squat to find items can help those who have joint stiffness or pain as well as those with walkers and wheelchairs, for example. Placing dishes in a drawer rather than overhead means less chance of stress on the arms and back and also lessens the chance someone will need a stool to reach the top shelves.

To illustrate her point, Traetto brought an "Age Explorer" suit, which changes the user's movements and abilities, giving a better sense of how homes can be better designed to make them more accessible.

On Friday, Katie Golec, junior designer at ACM, put on the suit to try some simple tasks. Her elbows and knees were restricted with straps, making bending more difficult. She wore gloves that lessened the sensation of grasping items. And a visor and glasses changed how she saw colour, her range of peripheral vision and the crispness of what she saw. The suit was also weighted, making it harder to move her muscles, which simulates muscle loss.

Move dishes for easy access

Traetto asked Golec to unscrew a previously opened water bottle. It took a few twists, but she was able to do it. Given a bottle with a wider mouth, it was easier to grasp and turn.

Golec was asked to access items under the sink and the bands around her knees simulated how hard it would be to double over to reach.

Andria Cowan Molyneaux, principal designer at ACM Designs, said she has also used the suit and called it "eye-opening."

StatsCan reported in 2012 that nearly 14 per cent of the country's population over 15 years old had a disability that limited daily activity.

"When we put things into perspective we really need to think of this segment of the marketplace and start … thinking differently or outside the box," Traetto said.

Katie Golec, junior designer, sorts paperclips by colour while wearing the Blum Age Explorer suit. The suit simulates some of the changes that can come with aging, which assists designers in creating more inclusive spaces. /JENN WATT Staff

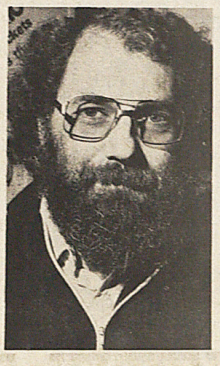
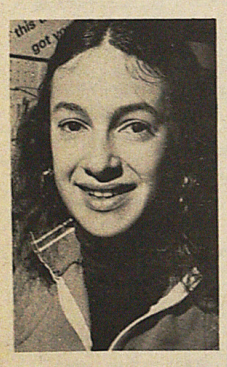
BOB BROHM

Bob Brohm, Haliburton, says "I thought it was really good. Excellent. It was much better than a person would think for the first time they have done something like that here. I didn't buy anything, but I sure did a lot of looking."



LARRY UNGER

Larry Unger, a Buffalo psychiatrist, reports, "We stopped for gas and the attendant suggested we drop by." He adds that he purchased some equipment from the Haliburton Marine display for use by his three children. "There were some craft displays we really enjoyed," he says.



RUTHELLEN UNGER

Ruthellen Unger, Larry's wife, also a psychiatrist, says "The whole attitude of the people there was really friendly. They weren't pushy, like in a big city." She notes this is the families fourth visit to the county, "We enjoy Haliburton."

RANDY ROLSTON

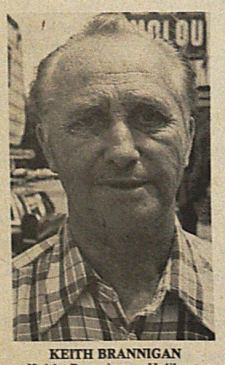
Randy Rolston, R. R. 2, Haliburton, says "It was pretty good. It represented quite a bit of the business community. I just came up here for the summer and it lets you know what the town has to offer. The motorcycle exhibit by Suzuki was good."

BRUCE SAWYER

Bruce Sawyer, Haliburton, says, "I thought it was a good show for a small town. I looked at it all. Everybody seemed to enjoy it. They had an ideal day for it, rainy, so that all the cottagers, with nothing to do, came in." Mr. Sawyer adds that he would like to see the show put on again next year.

ORVILLE AUSTIN

Orville Austin, Haliburton, went to see the show twice last weekend. He explains, "The first time I thought it was very intriguing. There were a lot of new displays to look at. Mr. Austin says he is in complete favor for the show's continuation, "I'll be there next year, if they have it."



KEITH BRANNIGAN

Keith Brannigan, Haliburton, also went to the show twice. He says, "I thought it was a very good show. We took a stroll through and looked at everything." He notes that the show was well laid out and would like to see the show repeated. "The show brought a lot of tourists into town," he adds.

MARION BARRY

Marion Barry, Haliburton, says, "I thought it was fantastic. There was so much for such a small town. I would like to see it again next year. It's nice to be able to go and see things all in one spot. I don't get much time to go shopping. I think it was well planned. I've heard nothing but good comments."

Six months planning bring success in first show

Almost six months of planning went into creating the successful Highland Home and Vacation Show that attracted an estimated 2,500 visitors in three days.

Pat Kennedy, Kinsmen chairman of advertising for the event, said the idea was suggested in January after one of the members had seen the Toronto Sportsman Show. At first members were hesitant, he said, as a similar event held two years ago by the Minden Kinsmen Club had flopped.

He noted that the money involved was sizeable and the Haliburton Club approached the idea cautiously. "It was going to cost $7,000 for booth material and $2,000 for rent," he said.

But the club decided to go ahead, cutting the cost to themselves by simply marking out booth spaces on the arena floor and letting the buyers set up their own stalls.

Six by eight foot booths went for $25, 16 x 10 ft. for $75 and 55 x 10 ft. stalls for $150, he said. The money made by the Kinsmen should be over the $2,000 mark, said Mr. Kennedy. He said a more accurate figure will be available when all the bills from the various committees come in.

There were six major committees involved in the event. Chairman of the entire show was Dick MacLean, who volunteered his services. "If it hadn't been for Dick the thing would never have been a success," said Mr. Kennedy.

He praised Mr. MacLean for the dedication he showed to the event, noting that often Mr. MacLean would take days off from work to sell booths or attend to organization. Near the end Mr. MacLean took a whole week off work to devote to the show.

Many of the booths he had to supervise used a lot of electricity, so an electrical committee was selected with chairmen, Larry Blanchard and Pete Douglas. Mr. Kennedy said these two men started wiring the displays at 8:30 p.m. on the Thursday before the show and worked almost non-stop until 11 a.m. Friday.

Other members of the club also put in a lot of time, he said. In the other committees there were; Miles Roberts and Jim Tice, food; Curry Whittaker (Pork), Bob Nichols and Ken Smith, dance; Murray Stephenson was running the popular 50-50 draw; Mr. Kennedy, advertising, and Al Bronson was there selling tickets to the truck draw which will be held in October.

On Saturday alone the 50-50 draw sold 480 tickets and was sold out.

But not everything went smoothly. Clark Bailey had been sent to Toronto to arrange for a carnival to be held with the show but he could find no takers. And, an attempt to have an eight foot TV screen installed in one of the arena corners also fell through.

Mr. Kennedy said that the show will definitely be held again next year, a date will probably be set in September. This time the carnival will be included, he said. "We are going to get working on that right away," said Mr. Kennedy. The date of the next show will be fixed to accommodate the carnival, he added.

The organization of the event included some strange hours for the Kinsmen involved in the show. As protection for the businessmen exhibiting in the show, there was an around the clock security patrol in the arena.

The booths had been marked out Monday night and set up by Thursday and that night the long, boring watch began, in four hour shifts. "Mostly we just watched the TV's, listened to sereos and played cards," said Mr. Kennedy. The first watch each night also swept the floors, to make the job easier for the arena crew who did the final clean-up.

Then came the big day. An opening ribbon was cut by Dysart et al Reeve, Murray Fearrey, as the Legion pipe band played. Then the reward for all the work, "The crowd was good Friday, it was good all weekend," said Mr. Kennedy.
